- There may be cases where you pay for a product through a grocery store or restaurant terminal, but the transaction is classified as a CASH transaction. This is possible if the terminal through which the payment was made is incorrectly configured by the acquirer. The bank does not assume responsibility for the correct classification of the transaction if the payment terminal does not correspond to its actual purpose. If you detect incorrectly registered terminals, please leave your feedback with the bank's contact center at 1150. After checking, the bank may add this terminal to the whitelist for further categorization as POS terminal.
- The Bank reserves the right to supplement the classification of transactions and the rules for defining CASH transactions by amending this Appendix.
- For informational purposes, the table specifies examples of CASH and POS transactions:

CASH-transactions (Cash withdrawals and equivalent transactions)		POS-transactions (Purchases)
Cash withdrawal at ATMs	Loan payments	Payment for purchases in stores
Any transaction in the cash desk of financial institutions	Deposits, wallets, and other account top-ups	Online payment for goods and services in online stores
Transfers to any cards	Automatic loan repayments	Payment in cafes and restaurants
Transaction in physical terminals registered with banks	Securities transactions	QR payments in the Payme app
Currency exchange	Money transfers	Online payment for goods and services in other mobile applications
Operations in lombards	Payments using bank details
